AS she heads to the ancient city-state of Kedah, Faradi is keenly aware of her roots.

We refer to thecamera, a national happening that encourages students to take photos of their experiences. The school offers an internship programme, the first of its kind in Singapore, to promote ‘real-world’ learning. The programme was created by the student leader to encourage students to take on real-world challenges and to develop their leadership skills. “I tried to make the most of the internship programme by reaching out to the local community and getting involved in different projects,” Faradi says. As a result, she has been able to gain valuable experience in the field of community development.

Faradi is currently a student at the Department of Public Administration at the National University of Singapore (NUS) and is serving as the president of the NUS Student’s Union. She is also a member of the NUS Women’s Union and the NUS Diversi- ty & Inclusion Committee.

The internship programme is an initiative of the NUS Student’s Union to encourage students to engage in community service. This programme is open to all students and provides them with opportunities to work in different sectors, from healthcare to education, and to gain valuable experience in the process.

Faradi has always been passionate about social issues and has been involved in various initiatives to promote community development. She was one of the founder members of the NUS Student’s Union and was the chairperson of the NUS Women’s Union. She has also been involved in various community service initiatives such as the NUS Women’s Union’s ‘Red Cross’ programme, which helps elderly people in the community.

Faradi believes in the power of education and has been working on various initiatives to promote education in the community. She has been involved in the NUS Women’s Union’s ‘School of the Future’ programme, which aims to provide educational opportunities to children in underprivileged areas. She has also been involved in the NUS Women’s Union’s ‘Reading for Change’ programme, which encourages students to read and develop their reading skills.

Despite her many commitments, Faradi has found time to pursue her other interests. In fact, she recently started her own startup, a photography studio, and is planning to launch an online platform to promote local artists.

Faradi is currently working on her Master’s degree in Social Policy at the National University of Singapore (NUS) and is planning to pursue a career in social work. She is also planning to continue her involvement in community service and to pursue her passion for photography.

Faradi believes that education and community service are essential for personal growth and development. She has always been passionate about social issues and has been involved in various initiatives to promote community development.

Faradi’s dedication to community service is evident in her work as the president of the NUS Student’s Union and the NUS Women’s Union.
